A MULTI-CLASSIFIER ENSEMBLE APPROACH TO FAKE NEWS DETECTION

ABSTRACT: Social media for news consumption is a double-edged sword. Its low cost, easy access, and rapid dissemination of information lead people to seek out and consume news from social media. On the other hand, it enables the wide spread of "fake news", i.e., low-quality news with intentionally false information. The extensive spread of fake news has the potential for extremely negative impacts on individuals and society. Therefore, fake news detection on social media has recently become emerging research that is attracting tremendous attention. Therefore, fake news detection on social media has recently become emerging research that is attracting tremendous attention. Fake news detection on social media presents unique characteristics and challenges that differ from traditional news media making existing detection algorithms ineffective or not applicable. Fake news is intentionally written to mislead readers to believe false information, which makes it difficult and nontrivial to detect based on news content; therefore, we need to include auxiliary information, such as user social engagements on social media, to help make a determination. Therefore, the proposed system effectively distinguishes false news in multiple languages such as English, Hindi, and Bengali distributed on the web utilizing machine learning. In this project, first, we collect the true and fake datasets and merge those into a single dataset. Second, we do feature extraction and data preprocessing. Third, we explore five individual machine learning algorithms such as MultinomialNB, BernoulliNB, Decision Tree, SGD, and Random Forest to detect fake news and use ensemble learning methods such as voting classifier to ensemble the base-predictors' predictions to improve the fake news detection system's overall performance. A web interface using Flask is developed for the demo purpose. Thus, this project will help us find false news in the English, Hindi, and Bengali languages effectively with the most accuracy.

INTRODUCTION

Fake News contains misleading information that could be checked. This maintains lies about a certain statistic in a country or exaggerated cost of certain services for a country, which may cause unrest in some countries like in Arabic Spring. There are organizations, like the House of Commons and the Crosscheck project, trying to deal with issues by confirming authors are accountable. However, their scope is so limited because they depend on human manual detection, in a globe with millions of articles either removed or being published every minute, this cannot be accountable or feasible manually. A solution could be, the development of a system to provide a credible automated index scoring, or rating for the credibility of different publishers, and news contexts. Social media as studied by Shrivastava et al. (2020) has been taking a considerable part in people's lives. It has become one of the most common places for fake news as it has no restrictions on people's posts since anyone can edit their posts whenever they want. However, that did not stop people from using social media as their source. The extensive use of social media has an enormous impact on many aspects of our lives. Considering the harmful outcome of spreading fake news, it has an enormous social impact. It can mislead citizens into believing misinformation about a specific product/ person or situation.

Abstract
The rise in neurological disorders within modern society emphasizes the critical need for accurate diagnosis and immediate treatment. Traditional diagnostic methods mostly depend on specialized Neurologists and primarily utilize MRI scans and related neuroimaging techniques to evaluate the neurological health of patients. With today's growing need for diagnosing neural disorders, we need more prominent automated diagnostic tools to enhance medical practices. In this system, we propose a novel approach to diagnosing neurological disorders such as Alzheimer's Disease, Brain tumor and Brain stroke using Sequential Convolutional Neural Networks (CNNs) and machine learning algorithms. Our system utilizes the CNN at most of its capabilities in analyzing neuroimaging data and extracting key features that indicate neurological disorders. Through rigorous training and validation processes, the system achieves notable accuracy in the identification and classification of neurological disorders based on neuroscan findings. This enhances healthcare delivery by improving patient outcomes in the field of neurology.

1. Introduction
Neurological disorders have wide range of conditions that affects the brain, spinal cord, and nervous system of the body. These disorders may have a remarkable impact on an person's life, that leads to rational harm, defect in motor system, and damages in sensory nerves. Understanding the hidden mechanisms of neurological diseases is important for accurate diagnosis and effective treatment strategies.

1.1 Common Neurological Diseases
The field of neurology consists variety of disorders including Alzheimer's disease, brain tumors, and brain strokes. Each of these neurological disorders has prominent challenges in terms of early detection, accurate diagnosis, and appropriate treatment. Alzheimer's disease (AD) is a disorder that could damage the cognitive functions, behavior, and memory. Early detection of these behavior is important as it can minimizes the damages caused by AD [1].

Table 1 Neural Disorders

Neural Disorder	Definition
Alzheimer's disease	A type of Dementia where the brain shrinks over time, causes from mild memory loss to eventually losing the ability to do the simplest tasks.
Brain Tumor	The growth of malignant or non-malignant tissues near the brain
Brain Stroke	The blockage of supply of blood to the brain that leads to damage of cells or even death.

ABSTRACT

The traditional methods of crop recommendation involve relying on the experience of the farmer or agricultural experts, which may not always provide accurate results. In contrast, the crop recommendation system using machine learning provides a more data-driven approach, allowing farmers to make informed decisions based on objective data analysis. Crop recommendation system using deep learning algorithms to predict crops and other relevant metrics based on a variety of factors, such as weather conditions, soil data, and historical crop data.The system aims to implement the best model for crop prediction, which can help farmers decide the type of crop to grow based on the climatic conditions and features present in the soil. To accomplish this, the system employ deep learning techniques, notably the Multi-layer Perceptron (MLP) algorithm, to analyze a comprehensive Comma-Separated Values (CSV) datasets. This datasets encompasses crucial agricultural parameters such as Nitrogen, Phosphorus, Potassium, Temperature, Humidity, pH levels, and Rainfall. Furthermore, the proposed system integrate Convolutional Neural Network (CNN) algorithms to classify soil types using image datasets. By processing soil images, the CNN model enables accurate identification of soil characteristics, facilitating predictions of crop suitability.

I. INTRODUCTION

The Traditional Methods Of Crop Recommendation Involve Relying On The Experience Of The Farmer Or Agricultural Experts, Which May not always provide accurate results. In contrast, the crop recommendation system using machine learning provides a more data-driven approach, allowing farmers to make informed decisions based on objective data analysis.Th proposed system recommends suitable crop based on text data and soil datasets, which can be achieved through the application of machine learning algorithms. The process involves using both the text data and soil datasets to train a machine learning model, which will then be able to predict the most suitable crop to plant in a particular area. The first step in this process is to collect the necessary data. The text data can be obtained from various sources such as weather reports, previous crop reports, and soil quality reports. The soil datasets can be obtained from soil surveys, laboratory tests, or remote sensing data. Once the data is collected, it needs to be preprocessed to ensure that it is in a format that can be used by the machine learning model. This may involve cleaning the data, removing any duplicates, and converting it to a format that can be easily read by the machine learning algorithm. The next step is to train the machine learning model using the preprocessed data. The model can be trained using algorithms such as Multi-layer Perceptron algorithm and Convolutional neural networks. During the training process, the algorithm will learn to recognize patterns in the data and make predictions based on those patterns.

Finally, the trained model can be used to predict the most suitable crop to plant in a particular area. The model will take into account the soil quality, weather conditions, and other relevant factors to make its prediction. This can help farmers make informed decisions about what crops to plant, which can increase yields and reduce the risk of crop failure.As the world population continues to grow, this technology will become increasingly important to ensure food security for future generations.It's also a crucial sector for Indian economy and also human future.

ABSTRACT

Parkinson's disease (PD) is a neurodegenerative disorder affecting 60% of people over the age of 50 years. Patients with Parkinson's (PWP) face mobility challenges and speech difficulties, making physical visits for treatment and monitoring a hurdle. PD can be treated through early detection, thus enabling patients to lead a normal life. The rise of an aging population over the world emphasizes the need to detect PD early, remotely and accurately. This paper highlights the use of machine learning techniques in telemedicine to detect PD in its early stages. Research has been carried out on the MDVP audio data of 30 PWP and healthy people during training of 4 ML models. Comparison of results of classification by Support Vector Machine (SVM), Random Forest, Lasso Regression, Light Gradient Boosting and XGBoosting models, yield Random Forest classifier as the ideal Machine Learning (ML) technique for detection of PD.

Keywords: Support Vector Machine (SVM), Random Forest, Lasso Regression, Light Gradient Boosting And Xgboosting Models, Yield Random Forest Classifier.

I. INTRODUCTION

1.1 PARKINSON DISEASE:

Parkinson's disease (PD) is a common neurological disorder impacting muscle movement in the body. It affects mobility, speech and posture leading to tremors, muscle rigidity and bradykinesia. It occurs due the death of neurons, resulting in a decrease of dopamine levels in the brain. Low levels of dopamine hamper communication between synapses, causing ineffective motor functions. While the progress of symptoms may vary from patient to patient, balance problems and tremors are the most prevalent side-effects of dopaminergic neuron death. Unfortunately, there is no cure for PD, hence Patients with Parkinson's (PWP) rely on early detection and tailored treatments to slow the progress of the disease.

1.2 PROGRESSION STAGES:

PD has 5 stages of progression and 90% PWP display signs of vocal cord injuries as a symptom in stage 0. Vocal impairment is not only easy to measure, but also falls under the category of telemedicine or remote medicine. Patients need not travel physically to a doctor instead; they can record audio using phones and perform a simple test at home. Common voice modulation symptoms include dysphonia and dysarthria. Patients can be asked to hold a single vowel's pitch for as long as possible, also known as sustained phonation or running speech tests can be administered, as a realistic test of impairment. These phonation tests can be used for diagnosis of Parkinson's at stage 0.

Following early detection, doctors can cater therapeutic solutions or deep brain simulation to reactivate the dopamine producing neurons in the brain, thereby slowing the progress of PD. Owing to its complex nature, there is no cure for Parkinson's till date. However, early identification followed by the right medication can reduce the tremors and imbalance symptoms in patients, enabling them to lead a normal life. We are using several Regressor ML algorithms and SVR algorithm. To achieve efficient prediction results.

II. LITERATURE SURVEY

Previous studies to predict PD have been implemented on MRI scans, gait and genetic data, but research on audio impairment for early detection is minimal. For instance, Bilal et. al. studied genetic data to predict the onset of PD in senior patients with SVM model. They trained an SVM model to reach an accuracy of 0.889, while

Abstract

Skin diseases are a serious concern of public health worldwide, and successful treatment needs a correct and timely diagnosis. Traditional diagnostic methods mostly depend on dermatologist's visual observation and this leads to subjective interpretations coupled with time-consuming processes. Deep learning algorithms have lately been known as powerful means for automated medical image analysis that present more accurate and quicker results at the same time. This study analyses the usage of state-of-the-art deep learning algorithms like YOLOv8, Deep CNN, and ResNet50 used for classification of skin diseases using dermatological images. Classifying the skin conditions relies heavily on the ability to identify and extract essential features. Different skin conditions were covered under large dataset thus providing a comprehensive foundation for training and validation aimed at ensuring that the models could generalize well across different diseases. Each algorithm also employs transfer learning techniques by utilizing pre-trained models based on large image datasets in order to improve adaptability and generalization over new data types. The use of deep learning algorithms in classifying skin diseases represents a significant method to achieve efficient and accurate diagnosis with benefits to both patients and healthcare professionals as is the trend in medical image analysis. The advanced deep learning models introduced in this paper excel at classifying complex skin diseases, outperforming the machine learning approaches in performance.

AN ENSEMBLE APPROACH FOR THE PREDICTION OF SOC CONSUMPTION IN ELECTRIC VEHICLES

Abstract: The rising acceptance of electric vehicles in today's world has brought a spotlight on how vital it is to precisely compute the state of charge (SOC) for efficient usage of battery capacity and vehicle recharging schedule for lengthy travel. This paper proposed a new stacking ensemble approach of two machine learning algorithms: XGBoost regressor and random forest. This works on the benefits of both algorithms to increase the model's prediction accuracy. It takes several attributes such as distance, speed, driving condition, and altimetry of the route into account to make accurate SOC estimation. The model consists of two stages, a base model and a meta-model. The base model gives the prediction of the XGBoost regressor and Random Forest individually and the meta-model gives the overall prediction. Finally, the result obtained from the experiment shows that the SOC prediction of the ensemble model is better than the individual models.

I.INTRODUCTION:

An electric vehicle battery or traction battery is a secondary rechargeable battery that powers an electric motor in both vehicles that run on electricity, such as hybrid and battery electric vehicles. The most affordable and feasible technologies available today are Lithium-ion batteries with a high specific capacity versus weight ratio. Integration of such Lithium-Ion Battery technology plays a vital role in modern electricity infrastructure like smart grids for load leveling, peak shaving techniques, and frequency regulation while reducing network interruptions [1]. Electrical fires resulting from malfunctions mostly occur with poor-quality batteries, therefore developing highly collaborative monitoring systems to identify any internal faults or degradation processes on time should be a priority [2]. Though other rechargeable batteries have been developed by manufacturers over the years to overcome lithium-ion technology limitations such as its limited lifespan – they remain less popular.

The most commonly used lates t battery types are Valve Regulated Lead Acid (VRLA), NiCd, NiMH, Zinc Air, and Sodium Nickel Chloride ("Zebra") batteries. Other power storage device technologies that offer higher power density than all these battery types are Supercapacitors but their ability to store energy is low compared to lithium-ion batteries. Electric vehicle functionality improves significantly by bringing together both these technological innovations [3]. To ensure an efficient run, keeping an eye on the State of Charge (SoC) proves critical as it denotes how much energy remains in the battery till it needs a recharge. Electric vehicle's reliable SOC consumption is important in augmenting vehicle performance, and effective energy management systems application while enhancing range estimates accuracy. Several approaches exist for determining SOC usage in electric cars, with commonly used ones being support vector regression or neural networks-based machine learning algorithms.

A hybrid model fusing deep learning models with Gaussian process regression improves SOC prediction results by combining different modeling techniques seamlessly [5]. Furthermore, Hybrid Ensemble Data-Driven method integrates two random learning algorithms that uncover associations between health indicators and practical SOH allowing greater accuracy when predicting Li-ion batterie's state of health, along with remaining useful life [6]. In contrast to traditional methods relying mostly on simplistic models or limited data input availability; deep learning approaches leverage contextual driving data temporal dependencies making them more efficient in improving SOC prediction accuracy alike an LSTM-based model suitable for producing precise short-term battery state projections useful for effective energy management implementation resulting from better range estimation, enhanced EV performance optimization [7,8].

DETECTION OF AUTISM SPECTRUM DISORDER USING DEEP LEARNING

Abstract - Social interaction, conduct, and cognitive ability are all impacted by the neuro developmental illness known as autism spectrum disorder (ASD). Even though ASD diagnosis can be difficult and time-consuming, early detection and intervention can improve long-term results. Early childhood is when autism spectrum disorder first manifests, and it eventually leads to issues with social, academic, and occupational functioning in society. Within the first year, autism signs are frequently visible in children. Some infants display autistic spectrum disorder symptoms as early as infancy, including decreased eye contact, a lack of responsiveness to their name, or a lack of interest in carers. To identify the presence of disorder at an early stage, use a deep learning system like LSTM. Self-Stimulatory Behaviours Dataset (SSBD) was used to collect the datasets, and video dataset was used to construct the system. The feature extraction algorithm is the Blaze Pose algorithm. The model file has been constructed, and the datasets will be trained using the deep learning technique. When a disease prediction input image is provided, the severity of the disease is determined as a result. Using the children's activity, the proposed system offers an effective way to more effectively anticipate the presence of autism spectrum disorder

1.INTRODUCTION

Detecting childhood autism involves identifying a neurological variation known as autism spectrum disorder (ASD), a deviation from typical neural functioning. This condition significantly impacts how an individual perceives and interacts with others, resulting in challenges related to social interaction and communication. Recognizable indicators of this disorder encompass restricted and repetitive behavioral patterns. The term "spectrum" in autism spectrum disorder encompasses a broad range of symptoms and varying severity levels.

Previously, Asperger's disorder, childhood integrative disorder, and an unspecified form of pervasive developmental disorder were viewed as distinct conditions constituting the spectrum of autism disorders. Although "Asperger's disorder" is widely perceived to be on the milder end of the autism spectrum disorder, the term is still occasionally used. Early on-set of autism spectrum disorder results in difficulties with social, cognitive and occupational functioning. Signs of autism are often noticeable in children within their first year, and a small percentage of them may exhibit typical development up to 18 to 24 months, after which autism symptoms begin to manifest.

Individuals with autism may experience a period of relapse. Despite the absence of a known cure for autism spectrum disorder, early and intensive intervention can significantly improve the lives of many children [1]. Autism spectrum disorder is characterized by challenges in social interaction and communication. Some common indications include not responding to their name, resistance to physical touch or cuddling, preference for solitary play, limited facial expressions, weak eye contact, difficulty engaging in conversation, slow or impaired speech, inability to initiate or maintain conversations, or difficulty expressing needs or categorizing things. gm KumaraKabilan

Thank you for joining us on the onboarding call, We loved seeing the energy and passion each of you bring to the Rabble family.

As we discussed on the call, this program is more than just advocacy, it's an opportunity to be part of a movement that's simplifying crypto and making Web3 accessible to everyone.

Your role is not just as an ambassador but as a larger part of our team and is critical to helping us share this vision and bring it to life on campuses and in communities worldwide.

Program Overview

As an ambassador, you'll progress through three tiers, Rookie, Advocate, and Leader. Each step comes with new challenges and bigger rewards:

- Cadet: Learn the ropes and spread the word.
- Advocate: Host workshops, create content, and build your network.
- Leader: Take on strategic responsibilities and mentor others.

What's In It for You (on completion of all tasks)

Monthly Stipend: Starting at 20-50$/month as you progress through tiers—plus additional incentives for successful referrals and achieving major milestones!

Exclusive Merchandise: Represent Rabble with pride.

Skill Certifications: Receive recognition for your achievements.

Event Budgets: Organize impactful meetups and workshops.

Career Opportunities: Top ambassadors are considered for internships and roles at Rabble and partner orgs.

Learning Opportunities: Work directly with Web3 experts and gain valuable insights.

Review on Enhancement of Electrostatic Precipitator in Automobiles

Vigneshwar P, Hari Balaji R, *Joshua M, Kavin A, Shanmugha Pandian I

Saranathan College of Engineering, Trichy, Tamil Nadu, India.

*Corresponding Author Email: joshuamaria265@gmail.com

Abstract: The Electrostatic Precipitator (ESP) is a widely employed device in boilers to mitigate the release of particulate matter. This study proposes the design and fabrication of a similar device tailored for reducing emissions from automobiles, particularly targeting older versions of BS vehicles lacking dedicated emission control mechanisms. Despite the catalytic converters equipped in BS-6 vehicles, there exists a need for an efficient emission reduction solution for their predecessors. This research aims to analyse various ESP designs through Computational Fluid Dynamics (CFD) simulations using ANSYS software. The design optimization will be conducted based on fluid flow analysis, leading to the fabrication of the most optimal prototype. The final step involves testing the fabricated prototype to ensure compliance with Pollution Under Control (PUC) standards, contributing to environmental sustainability.

Keywords: automobiles, emission, analysis, prototype, optimal, sustainability.

1. INTRODUCTION

The escalating concerns regarding vehicular emissions and their adverse environmental impact have underscored the necessity for innovative solutions. While modern automobiles, conforming to BS-6 standards, integrate catalytic converters for emission control, the same cannot be said for their predecessors adhering to earlier standards. In light of this, the Electrostatic Precipitator (ESP) emerges as a promising device for mitigating particulate matter emissions from older vehicles lacking dedicated control mechanisms. this research endeavours to address the gap by proposing the design and fabrication of an ESP specifically tailored for automobiles. The study involves a comprehensive analysis of various ESP designs using Computational Fluid Dynamics (CFD) simulations executed through ANSYS software. The focus lies on optimizing the device's design based on fluid flow analysis, with the ultimate goal of fabricating the most efficient prototype. The significance of this research extends beyond theoretical considerations, as the fabricated prototype will undergo practical testing to ensure its effectiveness in meeting Pollution Under Control (PUC) standards. By providing a viable solution for emission control in older vehicles, this study contributes to environmental sustainability and aligns with the broader efforts to curtail the impact of vehicular emissions on air quality.

Particle collection: It focuses on the electrohydrodynamic flow in the ESP. It focuses on reducing the escape window in the inlet of an ESP. The approach was based on a modification of ESP's geometry and increasing in voltage. The increase in voltage helps to attract finer particles and coarse particles. The numerical approach was based on corona discharge, gas flow dynamics and particle motion dynamics EHD flow analysis, Particle flow analysis, Multiparticle motion, Particle dispersion pattern and deposit pattern and particle collection efficiency are analysed. It is observed that collection efficiency is greatly improved.[1] It is based on increasing dust dust-collecting efficiency of an ESP. The collection efficiency of an ESP is affected by mud particles collected by the electrodes. Conventionally these mud particles are removed by creating vibrations. It aims to improve the vibration conditions. Modelling and FEA analysis of the electrodes are done along with the Implicit Transient Dynamic Analysis. A hammer hammer-punching mechanism is used to create the vibration in the ESP. The enhancement is done based on parameters such as applied voltage and flow of air.[2] It aims to investigate the effects of repetitive voltage impulses on the treatment efficiency of soot particles and to compare results with those achieved when a DC supply is used. Experiments have been
