Products made from whole blood

Donated blood is used to make a variety of different products, including:

Red cells – carry oxygen. Most recipients of donated blood are given red cells to boost the oxygen-carrying abilities of their own blood

Platelets – are needed for blood clotting. People who need extra platelets include people with certain diseases, such as leukaemia, or those recovering from a severe haemorrhage (bleeding)

- White cells – are part of the immune system. A person with compromised immunity, perhaps following severe infection, may be given white cells to bolster their immune system
- Plasma – is the liquid component of blood. Plasma helps boost blood volume
- Cryoprecipitate – is found in plasma and contains clotting factors. Cryoprecipitate can be isolated from plasma and is commonly used to treat severe bleeding.

Products made from blood plasma

Plasma is the liquid component of blood. Red cells, white cells and platelets are suspended in this liquid. Plasma also contains antibodies and other important proteins. Plasma is processed to make a number of different products including:

- Human immunoglobulin (Intragam) – used to boost the immune system
- Normal immunoglobulin – used to prevent hepatitis A, including for overseas travellers or for family contacts of people with this illness
- Hyper immunoglobulins – used in vaccinations for chickenpox, tetanus, cytomegalovirus and hepatitis B
- Anti-D – prevents haemolytic disease of newborn babies by inoculating a mother who is Rh-negative against the incompatible Rh-positive blood cells of her baby
- Human albumin (Albumex 20) – used to treat protein deficiency
- Biostat (Factor VIII Concentrate) – used to treat haemophilia A and other bleeding disorders
- Human coagulation factor IX (Monofix) – used to treat haemophilia B
- Human prothrombin complex (Prothrombinex HT) – used to treat bleeding disorders
- Human antithrombin III (Thrombotrol VF) – used to treat a condition characterised by premature blood clotting.
